

Cities given week to reach flood-control pact

By JIM MARXEN
Staff Writer

West End cities were given a week Monday to hammer out their differences over a proposed flood control assessment program.

County Supervisors told cities within flood control Zone 1 to agree on a plan after an alternate proposal was introduced by Ontario last week.

"I thought everyone had agreed to it," said Supervisor Cal McElwain referring to the original proposal. "It would be dam poor business to let $34 million go down the drain."

The county has been asked to put up $5.9 million to match approximately $34 million in federal funds for the completion of the Cucamonga Creek flood control project. A program for providing that money must be ready by July 8.

To raise the money a group of city and county representatives proposed that a one-time benefit assessment be levied against property owners within Zone 1 to raise $4 million.

Private developers would kick in an additional $1.9 million and would eventually be reimbursed by the state.

Assessments would be levied at the rate of $5 per unit in all areas except Rancho Cucamonga and Ontario. In those two cities, assessments would run approximately $30 per unit, according to the proposal.

In addition, the original plan called for no assessments to be levied against vacant or agricultural properties. The county is now proposing a minimum assessment on those properties.

The proposal also calls for an election in which voters would consider a long-term benefit assessment program to raise funds for maintenance, operations, repairs and repayment of loans.

Ontario officials, however, feel the formula for determining assessments is too complicated and would not lay a good foundation for a possible vote in the future.

The original formula is based on land uses and lot sizes. Included are a number of different land use categories with different "runoff" factors.

Instead, the proposal offered up by Ontario Mayor Robert Ellingwood calls for a one-cent-per-square-foot assessment against all properties within Rancho Cucamonga and Ontario.

The formula assumes that on residential properties, approximately 3,000 square feet will be "covered" and cause runoff. Commercial and industrial properties would be assessed on a percentage of their total size.

According to the formula, approximately $1.6 million could be raised in Ontario alone.

Brent Hunter, executive vice president of the Ontario Chamber of Commerce (which helped write Ellingwood's proposal), said there are a number of concerns with the original proposal.

First, he said, the "elaborate" system of assessments proposed by that formula might not be legally defensible because there is not enough engineering data to back up some of the runoff factors for various land uses.

"Runoff is runoff," he said. "It doesn't matter if the property is covered with asphalt or concrete. Covered land is covered and it ought to pay a penny a square foot."

The chamber was also concerned about the lack of a cap on the amount to be assessed landowners in Rancho Cucamonga and Ontario, and wording in the agreement that does not require reimbursement on a dollar for dollar basis when state funding is provided.

McElwain met with local officials last Thursday to discuss the assessment and was surprised to find that alternatives were being proposed by Ontario, he said.

Albert Reid, assistant county administrative officer, recommended to the board that another week be granted to allow for additional discussions between West End city managers.

Reid added that to obtain the $34 million in matching grants from the Army Corps of Engineers, the county must be able to come up with the $5.9 million in matching funds by July 8.

Area hiring outlook called 'pretty good'

By BRUCE THORNTON
Staff Writer

Right now, the employment picture in the West End "looks pretty good," according to a man who's close to the situation.

Glen Rankin, manager of the California Employment Development Department, 1511 E. Holt Blvd., Ontario, said in an interview that the job market is expanding in western San Bernardino County — from Rancho Cucamonga to Chino — the area served by the Ontario office.

"Unemployment is declining," Rankin said, "and, overall, employment is rising."

For example, he noted, the influx of high school and college graduates earlier this month has done little to overload the job market. This, he said, indicates the market is strong.

"We know it will have an effect," he added, "but so far this year, the graduate work force hasn't been noticeable."

Rankin said, however, that there are employment segments where — from time to time — problems exist.

Once these areas may be in the construction industry, he said, but added that "the construction workers must be working. At least, they're not filing that many employment claims."

"At this time," he said, "I don't see any large numbers of union people out of work. But I don't know how to project this situation. There has been a lot of home building in Ontario and Rancho Cucamonga. That may help keep building workers busy."

Larry Ruiz, business representative of the Carpenters Union Local 1572 headquartered in Pomona, corroborated Rankin's assessment. Ruiz explained it this way:

"We have approximately 2,000 members in our local and we maintain an out-of-work list. Anytime a member is out of work, he comes in and signs the list so he can be hired for a job."

"Right now (Tuesday) we have about 127 on the list. By the end of the week it may be about 150."

He termed this "encouraging" because even though money is tight and construction has been curtailed, "We don't have a lot of people out of work."

Rankin said another encouraging sign is that there are several large stores being built in the area and they'll employ people.

To mention a few, he said, there is K mart and Gemco in Rancho Cucamonga and Zody's in Upland.

What do the latest jobless figures for this area show?

For the entire two-county area of San Bernardino and Riverside, it was 7.8 percent.

This showed a decline from the preceding January in Ontario from 9.8 percent and from 8.9 percent in the two counties.

"Both dropped more than 1 percent for the four-month period," Rankin noted.

These figures are based on official statistical information.

"My own unofficial figures here in the office show that for May there were 1,881 new unemployment insurance claims with 11,470 weeks claimed.

"In April, there had been 2,172 new claims with 14,536 weeks claimed and

In good times or bad, there are always people who have business with the employment office. Some are shown here at the California Employment Development Department, 1511 E. Holt Blvd., Ontario.

to go back as far as January, there were 2,756 new claims with 18,776 weeks claimed.

"So you can see, there has been a steady decline in unemployment in the last few months," he said.

The real problem now — as it almost always is — the EDD office manager said, results from the large number of unskilled workers.

"We have some jobs that pay $3.00 an hour," Rankin said, "but they don't live on a minimum wage and yet many workers seem to lack the necessary skills for better jobs."

Can he paint a profile of a typical unemployed person in this area? Not really, he said. The unemployed here cover a broad scope.

"Besides the unskilled group, we have had some automotive workers who have been laid off. For example, at Freightliner in Chino recently there must have been more than 800 layoffs. And they were making good wages," Rankin said.

"Then if the General Electric Iron Plant should close down, some of the more highly skilled will find work in a short time. Others may retire. But there are going to be 600 or 700 people entering the labor market, some with only limited assembly skills."

If GE closes, he added, the EDD will make every effort to relocate the workers in new jobs or, if necessary, to arrange for retraining. The EDD, he said, has connections with community colleges, high schools and adult schools for retraining programs.

While it's difficult to project future employment, Rankin noted, it appears the expansion of the area around Ontario International Airport will provide jobs.

"You're likely to see the construction of transportation-related and other types of jobs in that area."

He also pointed to the prospective development of the former Ontario Motor Speedway property by Chevron Land and Development Co. and other proposed commercial development in Rancho Cucamonga as job producers.

"As long as we have growth," he concluded, "there'll be jobs."

Upland landfill dredging proves to be costly job

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

There's both good news and bad news regarding the dredging project in an Upland landfill.

The dump, at the northeast corner of 14th Street and Campus Avenue, has not been used as an active site since August 1979. Following the directives of the state Water Quality Control Board, the city is dredging buried trash out of a drainage channel running north-south through the area, to ensure water leaching through the trash-filled soil will not pollute underground water basins.

City engineer Fred Blanchard told City Council members recently the project was creating less of a foul odor than expected.

"We haven't received any complaints yet," said Blanchard this morning. "So far we've been lucky. All the trash we've dug up has been pretty dry, which cuts down on the smell."

"It isn't too bad unless you're right there in the ditch."

The bad news involves the amount of trash unearthed and its effect on the cost of the project. Originally budgeted for $106,000, Blanchard asked the council Monday to appropriate an additional $30,000.

The channel is used to handle overflow from a flood control basin near 15th Street. When the landfill was originally opened, the city agreed to put refuse to a depth of 15 feet, then cover it and use the channel for drainage.

Workers at the north end of the ditch have come upon an unpleasant surprise — trash up to a depth of 34 feet, more than twice what was anticipated.

Blanchard is hoping he won't have to use all the additional money, and engineers are checking old maps of the site to see if the ditch can be relocated slightly to an area that has less trash.

"We're trying to keep the costs down," said Blanchard. "We keep testing in hopes of finding a better location."

The city engineer said he didn't know if the additional work would necessitate a change in the project's completion date, now set for about July 10.

City Councilman Frank Carpenter questioned the growing cost of the project, saying he thought if the state was going to require the city to make the modifications, the state should also assist in funding the project.

"I think we all share Frank's frustration," said Blanchard. "But it's required."

The city is in the process of permanently closing the landfill, and must meet certain qualifications set by the state.

John Vasadzinski, water quality control engineer for the Water Quality Control Board, said Upland's lack of compliance in regard to the drainage ditch was discovered during a study for a required closure report.

"Every class II landfill (which contains decomposable, organic materials) must file a report with us," said Vasadzinski. "Although their deficiencies regarding the method of handling storm flows across the property would create problems only infrequently, it's still a worry."

He agreed it was an expensive project for the city to undertake, but said there was no question of where the fiscal responsibility lies.

"We had nothing to do with putting the refuse there," said Vasadzinski. "It boils down to the fact the city did it improperly in the first place, and it must be corrected."

He said the problem was not necessarily uncommon, particularly with landfills started many years ago.

Upland chamber officers installed

With an accent on cooperation between businesses, the chamber and the city, new officers for the Upland Chamber of Commerce were installed at a special meeting this week.

Contractor Richard Avent, 38, was sworn in as president of the organization.

Avent was raised in the West End and graduated from Chaffey High School in 1961. He began working as a carpenter, and now does general contracting work in the area.

He has been a member of the Upland chamber for 4 years. During the past year, he served as president of the economic development division, and has played an active role in working with the city on allowing commercial uses in industrial-zoned areas.

Avent praised the sense of cooperation between the city and business community in Upland. "It's the flow of communication between the two groups, the sense of working together, that makes Upland a special place to live," he said. "My primary interest is in keeping those lines of communication open."

He added that issues which will be important to the business community in the coming year of his presidency will include discussion of the city's sign ordinance, and a proposed increase in the fee schedule for building projects.

Avent, who lives in Upland with his wife and four children, was also recently appointed to the Regional Parks Advisory Commission.

Other officers named Wednesday included Jim Crowell, vice president of organizational affairs; Art Bertolina, vice president of the public affairs division; and Dick Hield, vice president of the economic development division. Immediate past president Dr. William Domb will become the chamber's treasurer.

Six new board members were also named, including Bill Rugg, Harvey Stone, John Munoz, Keith Duckworth, Tom McCall and Walter Rippe. Each will serve a 3-year term.

Tony Malone, executive director of the Upland chamber, said it is the second largest chamber of commerce in the county in terms of both budget and membership, second only to the San Bernardino chamber.

The installation was held during a dinner at Di Censo's restaurant, in conjunction with a banquet also honoring those who worked on the city's Diamond Jubilee celebration in May.

Student services director named

Monroe V. Lair, principal at Valley View High School, has been appointed the Chaffey Joint Union High School District's new director of student services.

Lair, 49, came to the district in 1955 as an agriculture and math teacher at Chaffey High School. He became a counselor at Ontario High and later director of guidance at Upland High before accepting the position at Valley View in 1974.

He replaces Richard L. Morrison who took a position in Ventura County.

To fill Lair's position at Valley

View, officials have accepted applications from within the district.

New location

Local homes for students sought

By RICHARD PERAZA
Staff Writer

Bob and Kathi Haine, local teachers and group representatives for Interstudy, are looking for local homes in which to place visiting Japanese students next month.

"So far, out of 30 (host families needed) I've got 13," Haine said.

His group of 30 college-aged students is only part of the 250 Japanese students the international study tour agency hopes to place in Ontario, LaVerne, Corona, Montclair, Claremont, Rancho Cucamonga and Pomona this summer.

Interstudy was set up 12 years ago in response to "a great deal of interest among Japanese and Swedish students to visit the West Coast," he said.

Despite a local area population of about 150,000 and the fact that host families reap cultural benefits from housing a foreign student for a month, it's not always easy to find volunteers, Haine admitted.

One of the reasons, he said, is the recent proliferation of similar programs. His is just one of several others also seeking local residents willing to provide room and board for visiting students.

Upland News; Rancho Cucamonga Times; Montclair Tribune

Haine said his group will arrive July 24 and stay for four weeks.

All of the visiting students speak English, although not all are very fluent. The reason for their visit is to develop conversational English skills and study American culture and family life up close, according to Haine.

He said three days a week, for three hours in the morning, they'll attend conversational English classes with him at the Ontario City Library.

Other times, they'll go out on all-day excursions to Olvera Street in Los Angeles, Hollywood, botanical gardens, area museums, the Grand Canyon and Disneyland.

Host families will be expected to help provide transportation to the regular library classes, but Interstudy will provide bus transportation for the field trips, Haine said.

Child molesters on the prowl

By SCOTT RECKARD
Staff Writer

Two recent incidents in Rancho Cucamonga illustrate the need for parents to educate their children to avoid strangers, law enforcement officials are saying.

In the first, a suspected child molester was arrested June 8 after an assault on a 5-year-old girl. Sheriff's detectives said the girl's assailant lured her from her front yard by asking if she'd like to look at a tennis ball.

A woman living in the Alta Loma neighborhood reported seeing the man with the child and identified him from an Alta Loma High School yearbook picture, detectives said. He was arrested at his father's house in Temple City and booked into the West End jail.

Three days later two more Alta Loma children — boys aged 7 and 9 — were approached by a man who tried to lure them into his car. The boys did exactly the right thing, officers said. They refused to go near the vehicle, and when the man returned waving a $20 bill, immediately told Lori Neilson, who happened to be returning from the store.

Lori Neilson — the mother of the 7-year-old — enlisted the help of an off-duty law-enforcement officer from a home nearby.

They tailed the intruder's car as it cruised slowly, moving through several tracts at the north end of Archibald Avenue. The lawman used his police radio to call in officers from the Rancho Cucamonga substation.

The car moved on, as if its driver either didn't realize or didn't care that another car was on his tail.

As the intruder left a housing tract after driving slowly through it twice, three sheriff's police cars pulled him over. Both Neilson and her child gave statements and identified the car and driver. Later checks with other neighbors revealed that the car had apparently cruised several neighborhoods the same day.

And, according to Randy Neilson, the boy's father, the same man had been seen on other occasions under suspicious circumstances.

The man was questioned and photographed, but was not held or charged with any offense. Mike Ingram, a sheriff's detective who talked over the case with deputy district attorneys and interviewed the Neilson boy twice, explains why:

"The elements just weren't there for the D.A. to prosecute. There wasn't enough done to file a complaint. It was certainly an odd situation, it didn't look right, but the elements weren't there."

Counters an upset Randy Neilson: "This guy tries to pick up our children and they let him go. I'm not blaming the police, it's the laws.... But because he hasn't actually done anything, hasn't ruined anyone's life yet, nothing is done...."

"Apparently there's nothing we can do about these maniacs. We need to at least make parents aware of the problem."

Neilson said that a newsletter from his son's school had warned parents that potential child molesters were in the neighborhood. "But how many of those (newsletters) were just thrown into the trash?" he asked.

Ingram and detectives from other agencies agree that there is a problem and say parents should be aware of it — and they say that law enforcement officers are ready to help.

Ingram said the majority of officers from the Rancho Cucamonga substation had spoken to groups at schools, clubs and churches. "We're available," he said.

"We've got a full-time officer on the neighborhood watch program," the detective continued. "If anyone has questions on what to do about this or anything else, they should call him."

Ingram praised the Neilson boy and his friend for "being smart. They immediately backed off and reported the crime." And he said all parents should tell their children to do the same.

He also praised the area's neighborhood watch program, pointing out that in each of the two recent cases residents were able to provide valuable information with just a few phone calls.

New group reorganizing West End Boys' Club

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

Like a phoenix rising from the ashes, the West End Boys' Club may reopen its doors within a month — offering a bigger and better program than ever, according to board members.

The club was forced to shut down its two facilities last December, after years of struggling with financial difficulties and what was termed community apathy.

Now, after a feverish six months of reorganization and recruiting, board president Jim Hampton hopes the club will be reestablished in borrowed facilities by July 20.

"The reason (the club) failed before is because it was poorly managed," said Jim Stombach, regional service director for the Boys' Club of America office in Tazana.

"Now we're bringing in proven professionals to get the club organized — and it's going to be a success."

Stombach has been working with the 12 active board members to set up the framework of the new program, and negotiate new sites for the club to use.

He said local school districts have been contacted, and tentative plans are to use two junior high schools, one in Upland and one in Ontario, as meeting places over the summer.

Up until December the club used two clubhouses. It rented one building in Ontario and owned a second in Upland. The Upland site was sold in February to a local investor.

If the two donated locations are used, it will help cut down on the club's operating costs while the organization gets reestablished.

The biggest hurdle for the boys' club is regaining funds from the West End United Way. Last year, the United Way allocated $54,000 for the club, with the understanding board members would raise a matching amount. Fundraising efforts fell far short of the required figure, hastening the closing of club facilities in December when United Way funds were cut off.

Hampton said he has talked unofficially with United Way officials about the new organizational structure and has received an encouraging response.

An official request for money will be made at a July 9 meeting of the United Way finance committee.

"We definitely support having a Boys' Club in the area," said Ralph Stillings, executive director of the United Way.

"As long as they meet our requirements, we're all set. We have that money set aside — but as stewards of the peoples' money, we also have to be sure we're supporting viable operations."

He said the backing the West End group is receiving from the national Boys' Club organization should make a major difference in the local club's success.

If the funds are approved, the club may be ready to serve area youth by July 20.

According to tentative plans, the club would be open from 11 a.m. through 7 p.m. five days a week. Boys and girls from 6 to 18 would be invited to participate.

"What makes Boys' Club programs unique is that they're not just recreational," said Stombach.

"They're guidance oriented, as well."

He said, for example, a basketball session would not only work on ball-playing skills, but on working as a team with peers, functioning under a system of rules and the penalties that must be paid if rules are not followed.

Also included would be arts and crafts, sports, chess, field trips and special interest clubs.

Phase II of the organization would begin after school starts. The club would probably be open from 3:30 to 8:30 p.m. during the weekdays, and from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturdays. During this period, the board of directors would begin a serious search for a new executive director to head the club. That position, a key post according to Stombach, would be filled by an experienced professional.

In the meantime, the board will hire two full-time employees, a program manager and a program coordinator, and about six part-time workers to serve as leaders. All eight individuals will work directly with the club members.

The national organization will also sponsor a professional consultant to help organize the new centers.

"We are not going to make the same mistakes as last time," said

Stombach.

Another important task will be choosing directors. Stombach stressed the need for involved, dedicated people.

"We just can't afford to have any dead wood, if this is going to be a dynamic organization," he said.

If the funding request is approved at the United Way's July 9 meeting, Hampton said it should still be possible to meet the opening date of July 20.

"What we're going to have is a club that will really serve the community," he said. "I think we're really going to be able to make an impact, once things get going."

West End students in the first through twelfth grades can go to summer school starting July 6 just by walking into their living rooms and turning on the television set. A month-long series of educational television programs about subjects ranging from reading, health, mathematics, science and social studies will air Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. over KCET-Channel 28.

The program, coordinated by the Regional Educational Television Advisory Council, is designed for parents to participate and work with their children.

Parents interested in obtaining the booklet should contact Hope McKay, coordinator for instructional television, by calling 383-2383 in San Bernardino.

Omnitrans Route 50 dropped

People previously using route 50 will be able to use Dial-A-Ride in Rancho Cucamonga by calling 629-3018. Transfers will be available from Dial-A-Ride to other Anyone wanting additional information on minimum income levels for larger households or on applying for this assistance can call 383-1153 or 383-3158.

"Home visits may be arranged for those persons unable to come into the office," said Rodolfo H. Castro, executive director of the Community Services Department.

Beware of unscrupulous 'plastic surgeons' local physicians warn

Editor's note: Because of the alarming number of women who are being maimed and disfigured — sometimes permanently — by unqualified "doctors", two local members of the California Society of Plastic Surgeons called a special press conference to warn consumers. This is the first of a two-part story explaining qualifications of a board-certified plastic surgeon.

By LINDA BERGSTEDT
Panorama Editor

If you are planning on having a face lift, a nose job or other cosmetic surgery, please be careful in choosing your doctor.

That is the warning from the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons and the California Society of Plastic Surgeons, who are alarmed over the growing number of women who are being disfigured or maimed for life. This is the result of unscrupulous doctors who advertise widely, promising miracles of cosmetic surgery and are unqualified to practice this delicate work.

"There are people who advertise themselves as facial plastic surgeons — board-certified, but they don't say board-certified in what. Their certification could be in family practice or ear-nose-and-throat and this does not make them qualified to practice plastic surgery," said Dr. Ligorio A. Calaycay Jr. of Pomona, a plastic surgeon.

Both he and Dr. Paul A. Rohrer of Upland represented the California Society of Plastic Surgeons during a recent press conference at The Castaways in Pomona.

"We must educate the public as to who are qualified to practice plastic surgery and what to expect," Dr. Rohrer said.

"Advertising is not bad in itself if it is true, if it tells you who are qualified," Dr. Calaycay added.

The two physicians pointed out that in order to become a certified plastic surgeon, a physician must pursue a course of post-graduate training of from five to seven years including a thorough grounding in general surgery and a minimum of two to three years in an approved plastic surgery training center.

In addition, he also must pass a rigorous examination before he is officially certified by the American Board of Plastic Surgery.

Dr. Calaycay explained that all physicians graduate from medical school, then serve an internship, which can be in general practice. Then follows four more years of school for general surgery to qualify on the board. A plastic surgeon takes additional training beyond all this.

Dr. Calaycay, a native of the Philippines, has been in private practice in Pomona for eight years in the specialty of plastic and reconstructive surgery and sub-specialty of hand surgery. He received his bachelor of arts, bachelor of science and doctor of medicine degrees from the University of Santo Tomas in Manila and started his medical career in the United States with internship at St. Lawrence Hospital in Lansing, Mich. Residency at St. Mary's Hospital in Saginaw, Mich., followed.

His general surgery residency was at Alexander Blain Hospital in Detroit and Pontiac General Hospital in affiliation with the University of New Mexico while his plastic surgery residency was completed at University of New Mexico Medical Center, Albuquerque. He was plastic surgery chief resident at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque and recipient of a Hand Surgery Fellowship from the University of Louisville, Ky.

Dr. Rohrer, a native San Franciscan, has been in private practice in Upland for the past three and a-half years and previously was located in San Bernardino and Laguna Beach.

He obtained his bachelor of arts degree in biological sciences from San Jose State College and his doctorate of medicine degree from Berne, Switzerland. His surgical residency was done at Santa Barbara Cottage and General Hospital and his residency in plastic and reconstructive surgery was accomplished at the University of Texas in Galveston.

"Plastic surgery is a very wide field," Dr. Calaycay explained. "You have to be a general surgeon before going on to plastic surgery specialty and you should be board-certified as a general surgeon. I trained five years, then three years in plastic surgery."

Dr. Rohrer said plastic surgery is a regional specialty with specialized techniques.

"There is a preponderance of surgery in certain areas such as face and breasts and we are trying to apply certain techniques to correct these areas," he said.

"We are utilizing certain procedures — whatever is necessary. You have to have artistic sensibilities in this field."

Dr. Calaycay agreed about the need for artistic sensibilities, adding that a general surgeon is not necessarily concerned with this.

"Detail is very important to us."

This 72-year-old female consulted a self-styled "plastic surgeon" for a small blemish on her face and was talked into a face peel. The "doctor" used 50 percent trichloroacetic acid on her face with predictable complications, infection and the above shown disfigurement and scarring which is impossible to correct.

Dr. Rohrer confirmed.

The term plastic surgery originated from the Greek word plastikos which means to form, shape or mold and does not refer to materials used by the cosmetic and reconstructive surgeon.

Don't shop for a plastic surgeon, advises the California Society of Plastic Surgeons, and don't be taken in by advertising.

Energy factors gain in home buyers' priorities

By CLYDE V. SMITH
Copley News Service

Want to save on housing expenses? Want to contribute a bit toward helping solve the nation's energy crisis? Not the least important, are you disturbed by rising utility company rates and want to put a brake on mounting, monthly power bills?

Obviously, the answer is yes, especially if you are among the large majority of home owners who now rate energy conservation as important or even more important than many other common amenities found in the modern new home.

Another survey by an independent research firm, commissioned by Dow Chemical Co., says virtually all builders have found that attic and wall insulation are more important to their buyers than traditional new home amenities such as central air conditioning and kitchen appliances. In fact, in this survey, 97 percent of builders said energy - saving features would be important to them personally if they were buying a new home.

Also, the latter survey concluded that "the soaring cost of energy is the catalyst for sweeping changes in the housing industry."

Since rising oil prices first sent shock waves through the economy in 1973, builders have increased energy efficiency in new homes by better than 30 percent. Each year the annual NAHB survey of home builders has shown further increases in efficiency.

Builders report that basic housing designs, the way buyers shop for a home, the way homes are sold, financing techniques and the affordability of new homes, all face significant modifications in the future. The Dow survey says most builders (84 percent) foresee basic changes in the housing product within the next five years, prompted by the need for more energy-efficient houses. The primary change, builders predict, is a trend toward smaller more compact housing.

In addition to including energy-saving features as standard items — that is, at no price hike — builders are now merchandising these built-in benefits more strongly with their customers. Eight of 10 builders now emphasize home energy efficiency as a sales point, as opposed to only 18 percent five years ago. And 88 percent of the builders are convinced that energy efficiency will be even more important as a selling tool five years from now.

NAHB's Research Foundation, with funding from the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), has gone even further with the building of an experimental "energy - efficient" house constructed in Maryland three years ago.

It achieved a 50 percent reduction in energy use, apparently slashing utility bills for heating and cooling in half.

This savings in the experimental house amounted to $545 a year, sufficient to recoup the extra cost of energy - saving features in six years or less. Ralph Johnson, president of the Research Foundation, said the pay-back period could be reduced to five years if certain less - effective features, included only for study purposes, were eliminated. Even more experimentation is under way. The NAHB Research Foundation, again the assistance of HUD, is building a second energy - efficient dwelling, designed to test building techniques expected to catch on within the next five to 10 years.

A two-level solarium and a rock-storage bin will provide passive solar heat for the second house, which is also being erected on a Maryland site. This home will also feature passive solar water heating, summer ventilation through a roof shaft and an earth source heat pump.

These extra energy - conservation features are or will be available for new homes. But how about us blokes with existing, older homes which were built before such features were common or available? Can we reduce our utility bills?

Yes, there are ways. For instance, turning down the water heater thermostat to 120 from 160 degrees plays a dramatic role in home - energy savings. In the first energy - efficient, experimental house, the hot water adjustment accounted for 28 percent of the savings.

Extra insulation can also be added in most existing houses. Heavier insulation can also be wrapped around most water heaters. Weather-stripping of windows and doors, caulking to plug cracks and holes in walls, sealing and caulking of all construction joints, use of thermally insulated draperies to prevent heat loss from windows — all are measures to reduce energy loss. Many owners find it cost effective to install solar water heating panels in roof tops of existing houses.

Some roofers deal under the table

By HERB LAWRENCE
Copley News Service

You can get stung badly if a new roof is put on your house by an unlicensed contractor who doesn't know or care about what he's doing.

It happens more often than it should.

It's bad enough to have a roof that leaks — but it's even worse to spend a hefty chunk of cash to put a new one on and then find it's a lemon.

So it's best to check that the contractor you use to put a new roof on your house is properly licensed and has a good track record.

The same thing goes if a home owners' association at a condominium complex has to spring for a new roof.

Professional roofers say there are a lot of turkeys in the roofing business.

They warn that the public should exercise the buyer-beware attitude before making the deal.

People normally don't think much about a roof until it leaks.

They ignore it until the rainy season when a leak becomes more apparent. That's the human thing to do.

But it's better to keep an eye on the roof to make sure it's in good shape. That can save you a number of sudden headaches.

Early detection of trouble can save an entire roof job. Sometimes, roofers can patch a part of a roof and give it new life.

But many times a roof is too far gone and an entire new roof is needed.

The idea that you and your family clamber around the roof to check it out isn't a good one, roofers say. The roof wasn't intended as a playground and people should stay off.

But periodic checks from a ladder and from inside the house can be helpful.

Daniel Thompson, an official of roofing company, said anyone needing a roof job should make sure that the roofing contractor is licensed by the state, bonded and insured.

He advised those needing a new roof to get at least three bids on the job.

And before selecting the contractor, an individual should do a little detective work and personally should check a contractor out.

"That means the home owner should take a look at other jobs the contractor has done and talk to the people he has served," Thompson said. "That way you will make sure that you aren't having the work done by a fly-by-night individual."

If the contractor has a solid track record of good jobs, then the chances are good the work "he will do on your roof will be OK," he said.

The bids on a roofing job can sometimes differ widely, so it's best to take realistic bid.

"If a bid is so low as to be too good to be true, you should be suspicious because the contractor obviously is cutting corners," he said. "And that will show up in your house."

"On the other hand, if the bid is too high, the contractor is perhaps financing a trip to Acapulco."

Just what a realistic bid might be can be determined by calling up some roofing contractors who have been in business for a few years.

Roofs last different periods of time depending on the quality of the work, the materials and the climate, plus the care given them by the occupants of the house.

But generally speaking, regardless of the type, they should last 10 years.

A spokesman for another roofing firm said a good roof should last at least 15 to 20 years.

But some roofs which were destined for a normal life of 10 years have gone on for 25 years and are still doing the job.

According to the spokesman, the cost depends on the size of the area to be covered, the quality of the materials to be used, the type of roof put in and the amount of labor needed.

Costs of roofs — like many other products — have been escalating the last few years, roofers say.

But the price climb for roofs has softened this year, they say. That's because demand is down right now.

With the economic outlook being somewhat murky, many people are deferring big purchases like putting a new top on the house.

Recognizes irony of view

Eldridge Cleaver wants death penalty expanded

By FRANK GREEN
Copley News Service
LOS ANGELES

Eldridge Cleaver wants the death penalty expanded to include all those convicted of violent crimes.

He recognizes the irony in his position.

"If that type of thinking had been on the law books 15 years ago, I'd be a dead man today," smiled the 45-year-old convicted felon. "But that's the only way to stop the increasing mayhem and crippling attacks against people. The teeth have been taken out of the penal code. We have to put the spearhead back on the spear by making punishment swift and certain."

Cleaver, seated in a coffee shop prior to a speaking engagement, made a name for himself during the 1960's as an acid-tongued Marxist revolutionary and author of the bitter "Soul On Ice."

In 10 years, he has traveled the length of the political and social spectrum — from information minister of the Black Panthers to a conservative, born-again Christian who recently announced his intent to run for mayor of Oakland.

Dressed in a three-piece denim-blue suit, this thin, graying, slightly built philosopher did look like a mainstream politician. And he sounded like one as he offered his thoughts about arming America to the teeth to ward off the international communist threat and how everyone should be involved in trying to catch the fabled American Dream.

"Ideally, we all should have a job, should participate in civic affairs, have a home, be married and have children," he said, between sips on a cup of grapefruit juice. "The only solution to attaining these goals is to make American industry more competitive and get the economy rolling again. Get Detroit to make a better car than the Japanese make."

Cleaver is currently working as a paid lecturer with the Informed Voter's League, a program sponsored by the Freeman Institute, a right-wing think tank based in Northern California. The purpose of the league, he explained, is to present the entire spectrum of political issues to the public "so that they are able to make rational decisions once in the voting booth."

He is also president of the 4th of July Movement, an educational program funded by a number of conservative organizations being established on some college campuses to "help kids combat alien ideologies, especially communism," he said.

Cleaver should know about the drawbacks of communist societies. He experienced them firsthand in the early 1970's while a fugitive from American justice.

On parole after serving nine years in prison on a rape charge, he was arrested in April 1968, after a shootout between Black Panthers and police in Oakland left three officers wounded and Panther founder Bobby Hutton dead.

His parole was revoked, but while free on $50,000 bail put up by friends,

Eldridge Cleaver

Cleaver went underground — first to Montreal, then to Cuba. This was the start of a six-year odyssey that was to take him around the world to North Korea, the USSR, North Vietnam, China, the Congo and Algeria in search of a utopia state based on economic, political and social equality. What he found instead was hypocrisy.

As a noted black militant, he said, "I was privy to behind-the-scenes machinations in those socialist countries, and I discovered many elite groups that were ripping off people."

While in Cuba, for instance, he saw many forms of favoritism indulged in by military and political officials. "Even Fidel was getting extra little material benefits," he said, shaking his head. "And the commandants around him all had apartments in every city and their own automobiles."

After disillusionment set in, Cleaver fled to Paris, where he joined his wife Kathleen and his son and daughter.

During his stay in France, he went through two transformations, first becoming something of a clothes designer. His most controversial offering to the fashion world was a line of men's trousers that featured a codpiece — a pouch-like addition to the pant's crotch area to enhance masculinity.

Then, on a summer's night in 1975, while setting on the balcony of his apartment in Paris, he said he looked up at the moon and saw the outlines of his former heroes — Mao, Castro and Marx. The images, he related, suddenly fell away and in their place was the face of Jesus Christ.

"I went to bed and had the best night's sleep I had ever experienced," he said. "I woke up the next morning and realized that I had to come back home and give my life over to Christianity."

Cleaver surrendered to American police in November 1975. He pleaded guilty to assault on a police officer in connection with the 1968 Oakland shoot-out and served nine months in prison before being paroled.

He now lives with his wife, a secretary, and children in Palo Alto.

He makes his living traveling extensively on the prayer breakfast circuit, where he is in great demand by numerous Christian organizations. In his lectures, he outlined his religious conversion and philosophy, and expounds upon his new-found political interests.

He remains in touch with some colleagues from his more radical days — although most have disassociated themselves from his work today.

"Former anti-war radical Tom Hayden refused to talk to me when I came back to America," he said. "And I sent a note to Huey Newton about possibly getting together and burying the hatchet. He never answered me."

$15 million Claremont school budget approved

The Claremont school board has approved a $15 million tentative budget for the 1981-82 school year. Later in the summer the school board will approve a publication budget and, before the end of August, will adopt a final budget for next year.

The tentative spending plan, approved at the June 15 session, is more than $1,200,000 less than the preliminary budget presented to the board last month. This was caused by the transfer of money from the sale of two district sites to the building fund and deferred maintenance fund, according to a district memorandum from Charles Abbott, assistant superintendent for business services.

The proceeds were from the sale of the Miramar Avenue site and the College Avenue site. The transfers were made by the board on June 1.

Eight Country Cousins — who really aren't related — will serve as hosts and hostesses at the Los Angeles County Fair in Pomona Sept. 10-27.

They were selected after an evaluation process based on general appearance, personality, stage presence, photographic qualities and diction.

Feminine members of the octet are Laura Anne Brown, 21, Upland, a student at Chaffey College; Diane Botsford, 20, Pomona, an electronics company employee; Marci Dominguez, 20, Chino, a sophomore at Mt. San Antonio College; and Carla Brotherton, 19, also a Mt. SAC sophomore.

Male members of the Cousins are John Phillips, 23, of the University of La Verne; Charles Wachtel, 30, Pomona, an employee for an auditing and accounting firm; David Kellner, 24, Claremont, a professional singer and dancer; and Mark Platt, 21, San Dimas, a University of La Verne senior.

There were 27 applicants, in all, according to special events coordinator Vicki Carr.

The Country Cousins have a variety of interests:

Brown has appeared on television, has a half-dozen film credits and has appeared in nine theatrical shows.

Botsford is learning restaurant management.

Dominguez is a centerfielder in Chino's Women's Softball League.

Brotherton is majoring in fashion merchandising and is a professional seamstress.

Phillips is a special education major whose objective is to be a basketball coach and teach the handicapped.

Kellner, in addition to being a dancer and singer, is a choreographer and is affiliated with Mission Ballet Co.

Platt, currently employed at a restaurant, aspires to be a high school professor and guidance counselor.

Wachtel has attended Columbia School of Broadcasting and sees television commercials as a career goal.

The Country Cousins will appear daily at the fair and will make personal appearances to promote it.

Taking a little time to socialize are the eight people who will be the Country Cousins at this year's Los Angeles County Fair. The women, from right, are Marci Dominguez, 20, Chino; Laura Brown, 21, Upland; Carla Brotherton, 19, Pomona; and Diane Botsford, 20, another Pomonan. The men, from front to back, are Charles Wachtel, 30, Pomona; David Kellner, 24, Claremont; Mark Platt, 21, San Dimas, and John Phillips, 23, La Verne. They'll be seen daily at the fair from Sept. 10-27.

Redevelopment district for Chino Hills established

By BOB NAGEY
Staff Writer

The formation of a redevelopment district that will generate many millions of dollars for the development of the Chino Hills has been approved by the San Bernardino County Planning Commission.

The proposal now goes before the county's Redevelopment Agency for public hearings and the subsequent adoption of the boundary lines and preliminary plans, according to county planner Delores Carter.

By forming the redevelopment district, the county intends to freeze property taxes at their present levels and to use additional taxes generated by new developments and improvements to pay off bonds for the construction of roads, establishment of public facilities, extension of fire services and law enforcement, and development of park sites.

The Planning Commission recommendation is for the formation of three noncontiguous redevelopment areas within the Chino Hills.

The first, and largest, is located south of the Pomona Freeway, west of the Corona Expressway, east of Peyton Road and north of Pine Avenue. It includes the Rolling Ridge Estates and the Glenmeade-Los Seranos area.

The second area is generally west of the switchback along Carbon Canyon Road and runs to the Orange County Line. It includes the Western Hills and Sleepy Hollow area.

Too old? Retention of older workers could improve productivity

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

Analysis

With Social Security in desperate trouble, the nation is asking itself: Can we afford to help finance older people in their retirement? Nobody is asking an equally important question: Since people age 55 to 75 are such excellent workers, can we afford to let them leave the work force?

It is not just a question of Social Security's solvency. It's also a question of the nation's productivity. Numerous studies have shown that older people as a group are better workers than younger people.

A few years ago, it was assumed that older people were less productive, less punctual, less attentive and suffered higher absenteeism. That's one reason government policymakers thought it in the public interest that people retire early, so that younger people could assume posts in industry.

As is so often the case, the government was wrong. New studies are puncturing the old myths. Older workers as a group are quite punctual, conscientious and productive. Generally, their absenteeism is lower.

And there is another, all-important factor: They believe in work. They are imbued with the American work ethic. Nobody told them that the world owed them a living.

Statistically, it's remarkable that the older workers perform so well as a group, because without question there are some older people who lose their health and some of their skills in their later years.

There is widespread agreement among people who have studied the situation that it behooves employers — and society in general — to be flexible: That is, a smart employer will do what is necessary to keep an older, productive person on the payroll — moving him or her to a less physically demanding, or less emotionally stressful job if necessary.

It's folly to mandate retirement. Congress lifted the mandatory retirement age of 65 several years ago and may remove it entirely. With American productivity becoming an international disgrace, it simply makes no sense to force a productive worker into retirement.

And since financing that person on Social Security would also be a burden, there's a positive double-whammy effect on keeping a good person on the job if he or she wants to stay there.

Unfortunately, the government's position of past years has steered public policy in the exactly the wrong direction, as statistics show: In 1940 a full 69.9 percent of men age 65 were still in the labor force. By 1970 it was only 47.1 and by 1979 a low 36.9 percent.

The trend was similar for 70-year-olds: In 1940 a full 44 percent of them worked. Two years ago, it was down to 23.7, according to Bureau of the Census data.

Just recently, another new study reminded us of what a mistake we have been making: According to a 900-company survey of members of the American Society for Personnel Administration (ASPA), younger employees were found to have worse punctuality and absenteeism records than older employees.

Companies told ASPA that younger employees have more absences of a short duration, while older employees have fewer, but longer absences. It's the short absences which toss a monkey wrench into productivity: You can find a replacement for a person out three months, but it's difficult to get an adequate replacement in a hurry for the person who calls in with a hangover.

ASPA President Ronald C. Pilenzo, who told a congressional committee back in 1977 that Social Security was on the brink, said in an interview that, "Statistics suggest that the older employees are more stable, more reliable — and that you can't categorize people by their chronological age."

Besides, the age-65 cutoff that countries have made so important is just a historical accident, he pointed out: Prince Otto Eduard Leopold von Bismarck, who instituted compulsory old-age insurance for workmen in Germany in the late 1800s, chose it as the watershed age because in those days few people lived to achieve it.

What is important is to give productive people the option to continue working — whatever their chronological age. "The crux of the matter is evaluating each individual's performance and what he can be expected to accomplish in the future," he said. "If a good old man can no longer be selling on the road, give him an inside sales job."

Said Pilenzo, "I predict that the next thing Congress will do is remove that age-70 cap entirely. The argument always used to be that keeping the older person on the job bottled up the younger person. But now we're looking at productivity. If the person is productive, we have to find creative ways to keep him on the job."

Help garden to survive while you're on vacation

This year when you tromp off on a well-deserved vacation, don't leave home with doubts about how your garden will survive without you. Your garden can be alive and flourishing when you return if you are willing to prepare in advance.

Start with the lawn. Mow it, and follow this with a thorough watering. Be careful not to fertilize heavily before leaving as you won't be there to give the lawn those extra waterings needed with most fertilizers and you will end up coming back to a lawn with brown spots in it. If you do want to fertilize, give it a light feeding.

Trees and shrubs should have basins dug around them. Soak them thoroughly and mulch. This will help these plants conserve moisture through a waterless one or two weeks. For shallow-rooted shrubs such as azaleas, camellias, rhododendrons and fuchsias or for shallow-rooted trees, mulching is a must and refrain from doing too much diggin around their root area as you may damage them.

Big shallow basins around your rose shrubs too. Water well and apply some balanced fertilizer at the base of each rose shrub and water it thoroughly. Before you leave, it's a good idea to clip off dead blooms from the roses and spray to retard mildew while you're gone.

You will be surprised how well flower beds will survive the one or two weeks of no care if you prepare them correctly. Cultivate the soil so it will soak up water well and then water it thoroughly. Mulching will also help here to conserve moisture and keep the weeds at bay. Give the flower beds their last watering the night before you leave on vacation.

As for houseplants, you can put the smaller plants in plastic bags, creating an almost terrarium effect. The larger plants can be watered thoroughly by dunking them in a bucket of water or bathtub until the air bubbles stop coming up through the soil (this is a good practice anytime to help leech the salts out of the soil) and then fill the saucer with water just before leaving.

These training sessions will also be held at Mt. Calvary in Diamond Bar, July 20-22, from 7 to 10 p.m. The Rev. August L. Hauptman, pastor of Pilgrim Lutheran Church for the deaf in Los Angeles, will be in charge and will be assisted by Richard French, a lay minister from Seattle. Churches desiring to attend the deaf ministry workshop may receive further information by calling the church office.

Treasure hunt?

This boy was more interested in kid-sized cars

There was a lesson to be learned at the L.A. Roadster Club's 17th Annual Roadster Exhibition Trade Show and Swap Meet.

The funny thing about cars is they start off as over-priced lemons; you trade them in as depreciated autos; they deteriorate into worthless junkers and finally end up being expensive roadsters.

Entire clubs spring up around the aging autos as the machine which was once kicked and cursed as a worthless bucket of bolts becomes a pampered collector's item.

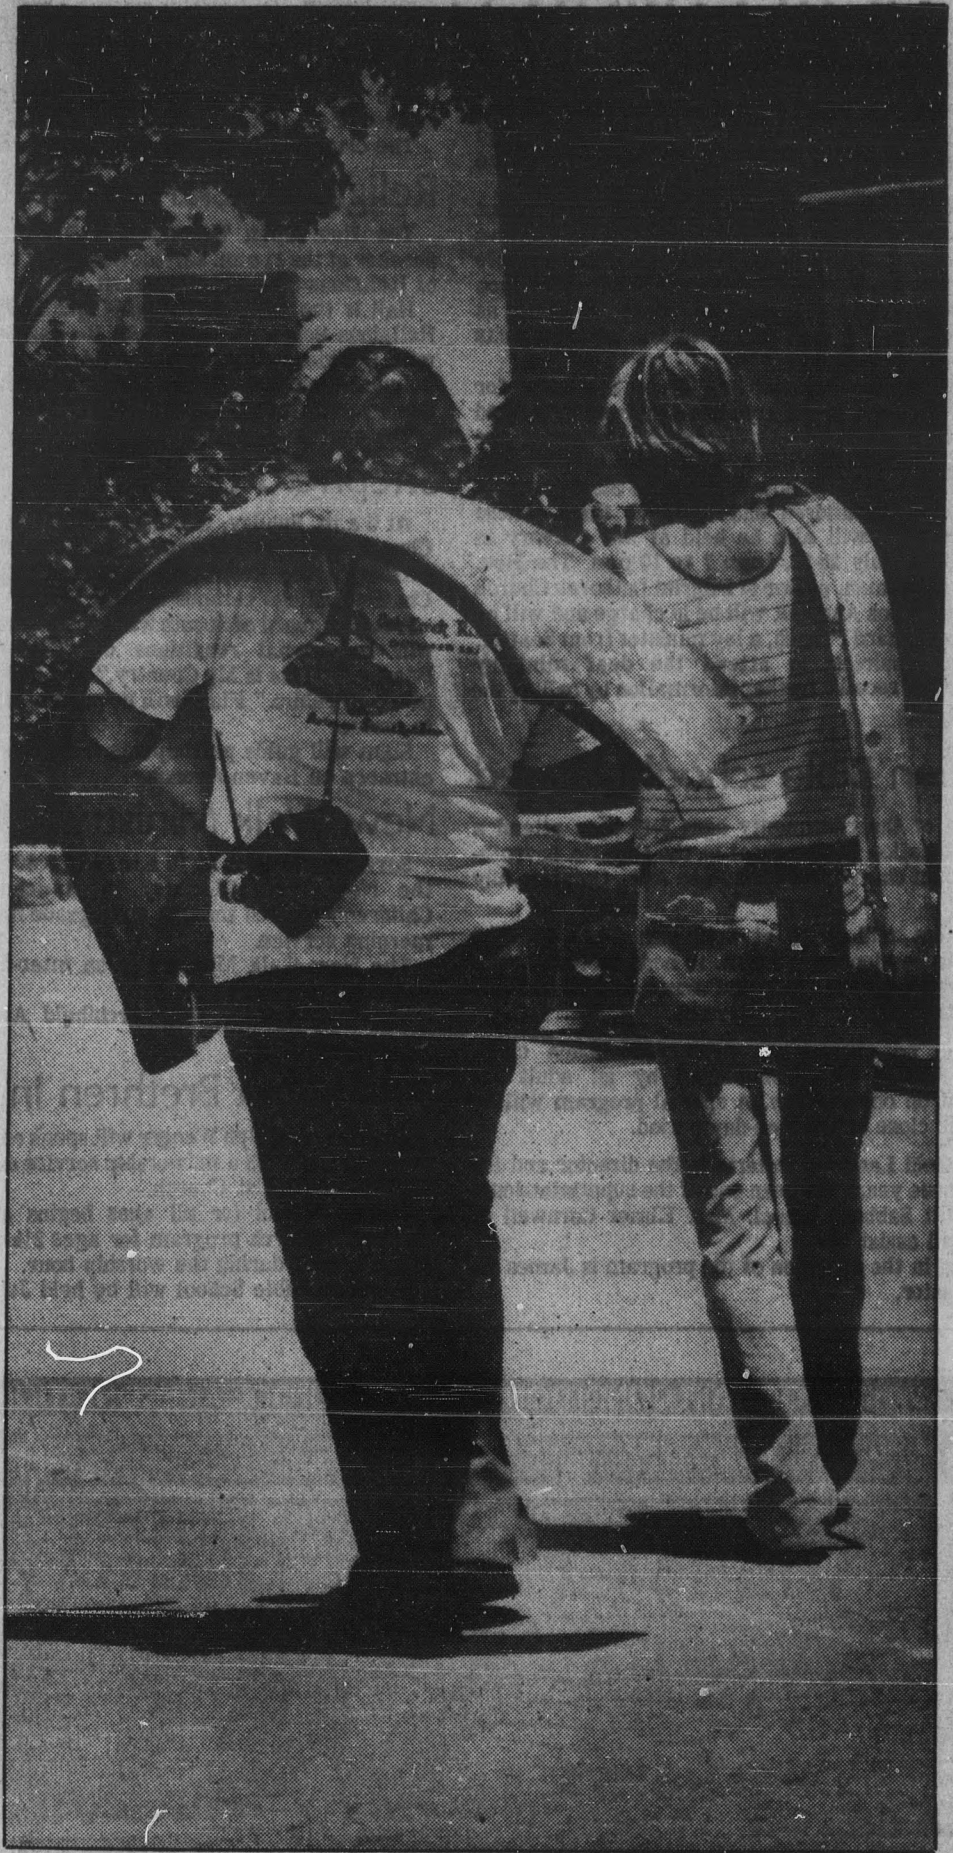

Roadster fans at the Los Angeles County Fairgrounds in Pomona seemed to have only passing interest in several finished hot rods placed on display. Chromed engines, candied paint jobs and custom upholstery were admired but only for a short time.

The real attention-getters were aging, rusted parts. Car enthusiasts spent hours examining ancient fenders, new and used engine components and tarnished hub caps.

And swap meet prices can't be beat — only $50 for one genuine taillight.

There were also bargain prices on crippled cars. They make excellent roadster starter kits. The perfect gift for the man who loves to tinker.

One man's junk is another man's treasure — and a middle man's profit.

These two found out it's not always easy to sell a roadster in the rough.

No roadster is complete without a classy set of hub caps.

In 'Little Johnny Jones'

David Cassidy at ease in musical

By ROBERT P. LAURENCE
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — So David Cassidy's starring in a George M. Cohan musical.

Isn't he the young fellow who was on "The Partridge Family" and then became a rock star?

Yes and no. He's the same person, but that isn't exactly the way he looks at it.

Cassidy, whose face at 31 is still round and sweetly boyish, once filled 50,000-seat sports stadiums during a worldwide rock tour. He now says that "rock sort of interrupted my career."

Cassidy was born into the world of the theater, and went from there into television, acting the role of a young man who becomes part of a family musical group. So it was an easy step from the television sound stage to the rock concert stage.

He was obviously perfectly at ease backstage, puffing an occasional cigarette and alternately donning and doffing a battered newsboy cap while he waited to rehearse "Little Johnny Jones," the 1904 Cohan hit.

This was the show that spawned the songs "Yankee Doodle Dandy" and "Give My Regards to Broadway," and Cassidy plays Cohan's own role of the American jockey in England.

The son of Broadway and film actor Jack Cassidy (a Tony Award for "She Loves Me") and actress Evelyn Ward, David got his own start in a West Coast stage show called "And So To Bed," and soon thereafter, in 1969, went to Broadway for a musical by song satirist Allan Sherman, "The Fig Leaves Are Falling."

Cassidy said it was the Sherman show that gave him his first professional experience, adding candidly that "it was not one of the all-time greats. It was not a good show, but it was good experience." After a few weeks out of town and three weeks of previews, it closed one week after opening.

But executives from CBS Films saw it and liked Cassidy. So he returned to the West Coast. He never made a movie, but he did land the part of Keith in "The Partridge Family," the series based loosely on the Cowsills, a popular mother-and-kids rock band of the late 1960s. Shirley Jones, his real-life stepmother, played his mother.

Soon David Cassidy and Jones were making records together, and later he began his solo rock career.

Young fans adored him, but the critics looked down their noses. "I didn't find it hard to be accepted by folks," Cassidy said of his early-1970s rock career. "But I was not accepted by the clique of rock 'n' roll elitists. I was never heavy enough, never serious enough. The prejudice was in favor of heavy metal. It was a closed scene. It was easy to take a pot shot at someone who was just trying to entertain."

He resented the disdain he encountered, but a world tour in 1974 and 1975 was, nevertheless, a popular success. In many ways, too popular. Fan hysteria was the rule. In Britain's White City Stadium, a young girl with a heart condition suffered a fatal attack.

Suddenly rock 'n' roll success lost some of its attraction.

"The critics would come and ignore the show and, instead, review the phenomenon. The kids fainting, the wildness. One compared the scene to World War III. I felt I was the target for all this negativity. It was a plague that followed me around," Cassidy remembered. "The death of that girl left a bad aftertaste in my mouth."

So he left the music scene, though he cut a moderately successful album, "Home Is Where the Heart Is," in 1978. In 1975, he had been the first to record Bruce Johnston's "I Write the Songs," later a major hit for Barry Manilow. Now he and his wife, actress Kay Lenz, live in Los Angeles, traveling frequently to their thoroughbred ranch in Rancho California. With the "Little Johnny Jones" opening, he believes that "the climate in this country is really right for this show. People are rediscovering their feelings of patriotism, and this is a show that will make people proud of who they are."

MHAW promotes mental health

If you need help in promoting mental health and emotional well-being or if you want to volunteer to help others to achieve these goals, the Mental Health Association West is looking for you.

A new, non-profit volunteer organization, the association will act as a central information and referral office by directing anyone in need of help to appropriate agencies. The MHAW does not treat patients, but focuses instead on prevention, education, information, consultation and acting as a clearing house.

Workshops, public speaking and support for self-help groups are other services offered. The association is forming mutual help groups for people with problems such as health, family, nervousness, loneliness, depression, stress, smoking and overweight to name a few.

Dr. Michael Geffen, a clinical psychologist from Geffen Center for Psychological Growth in Upland, has volunteered his time for regular workshops on different subjects in the local area.

If you need help or can volunteer some time, talent and ideas to this new organization, call 948-3030 and talk to Betty, Cathy or Elizabeth. People also are invited to drop by the association's office at 8270 Foothill Blvd., Suite L, Rancho Cucamonga (next to the Sycamore Inn).

There's only 43,252,003,274,856,000 combinations

By JO TUBB
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — It certainly doesn't look dangerous. On the contrary, the colorful fist-sized cube is so pretty that strangers are tempted to pick it up and actually play with the thing.

It is then, however, that its potential to alarm becomes startlingly clear.

"Don't touch it!" gasps someone intimately familiar with the object. "For Pete's sake, don't touch it!"

What in the world?

The cube in question is neither a priceless objet d'art, though its design is reminiscent of Mondrian, nor a bomb, though it can ignite short fuses and is said to ravage even the sturdiest minds.

It is rather the latest puzzle to fascinate, intrigue, challenge and — almost always — stump the nation of rabid game-players. It's called the Rubik's Cube.

Devised by Erno Rubik, an architecture teacher in Budapest, the 3x3x3 cube looks innocent enough. Its six sides, each its own bright color, consist of small cubicles that can be manipulated with a twist of the wrist to various positions on the larger cube. In a matter of seconds, the puzzle becomes a hodgepodge of colors. The object is to restore it to its original state — a solid color on each side.

If that sounds easy, consider that mathematicians have figured the possible color combinations at 43,252,003,274,856,000. If you're lousy at zeros, that's more than 43 quintillion possibilities.

And most of them, of course, are wrong.

The upshot is that millions of people — Ideal Toy Corp. sold 4.5 million in the United States last year — are spending hours, weeks and months twiddling the cubes, to use cubist vernacular. And most of them, at one point or another, are very, very frustrated.

It may take hours of concentrated effort to solve one side of the puzzle, only to find that solid side once again becomes a hodgepodge when a second side is attacked. Most give up here, if not before.

And there is always the possibility any progress might be obliterated when a naive visitor idly picks up the cube and begins manipulating the pretty pieces. Thus the anxious shouts of, "Don't touch it!"

Spouses can be estranged and friends lost in the fanatical process of solving the cube. A man who spent several weeks twiddling his cubes, slowly working toward his own solution, came home one evening to find his puzzle sitting on the coffee table — solved. He immediately got on the phone, accusing several friends of sabotage.

"I didn't do it," one of the accused says now. "I wouldn't go near that thing, but he was crazy with rage."

Rubik's Cube can do that to you.

No one understands this better than Bill, Mike and Chris Mason of Palos Verdes Peninsula, a father and sons trio of honest-to-Edo cubemeisters. While cubists are merely addicted to the puzzle, cubemeisters are those who have "contributed to the profound science of cubology."

"This is the ultimate puzzle," says Bill, who discovered the cube late last summer with his two sons. "Even though it is probably the most difficult ever made, it is so popular that it is almost impossible to find."

Most of those who solve the puzzle do so only after being given a hint or two (Ideal sells the solution for $2). But the Masons have not only solved the puzzle on their own, they've developed a series of fascinating cube patterns they can execute in a matter of minutes.

"It's basically a matter of being able to visualize in three dimensions," says a smiling Bill. The fact that he has advanced degrees in both mathematics and aeronautical engineering probably doesn't hurt.

The boys are not equipped with similar degrees, not yet, anyway, but they do share their father's facility and love for the cube.

The quest for speed, says Mike, is what propels him most strongly into endless hours of twiddling.

"Right now I can solve the puzzle in one minute, 15 seconds," he says seriously, noting that the acceptable time is "anywhere between five hours and a year."

Chris, a student at nearby Rolling Hills High School, is more interested in efficiency. His aim is to unscramble a puzzle in the least number of twists possible.

If a friend hands him a cube scrambled in 12 maniacal twists, he will study it to determine if he can unscramble it in 10 or eight or six methodical ones.

"No one has ever handed me a puzzle I couldn't solve," says the 16-year-old. "I've even been able to teach my method to some of my friends."

His father says Chris is also the best of the three at coming up with the most efficient ways of executing attractive patterns.

Incredibly enough, those patterns often evolve over the phone as Bill talks long distance with Mike, a freshman architectural engineering student at Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo.

As Mike twiddles his cubes on one end of the line, Bill twiddles his on the other.

"When Bill is on the phone with a Rubik's Cube in his hands, I know he's talking to Mike," says Mrs. Mason. "I usually just leave the room."

That is not to say she isn't interested in the complex cube. She has done her fair share of twiddling. It's only to say she isn't a cubemeister like her men. In fact, she admits she doesn't even speak the same language.

It's safe to say most people don't. When the mason men sit down to explain their solution to a novice, even their drawings on napkins may seem like Greek. But they are confident it can be understood by anyone seriously interested in cubism.

As for the future of cubism itself, the Masons feel it will only continue its popularity sweep around the world. "The cube was available in Europe two years before it was available here, so Europeans have had that much time to become faster at solving it," Bill says. "I can foresee international speed competition in the future."

Down-and-out man in spotlight

By PETER KAYE
Copley News Service

Along the west end of El Cajon Boulevard in the City of El Cajon, is a handful of what used to be called motor courts — clusters of decaying cabins tucked in among the fast-food restaurants, new-car dealerships and other more familiar symbols of our high-speed world.

Years ago these courts provided overnight havens for truckers and travelers who had made the tortuous drive on Highway 80 from El Centro, Yuma, Ariz., and points east.

Now they squat forlornly in the shadow of Interstate 8 — a tiny suburban slum long since converted to dwellings for the down-and-outers of a society that literally passes them by every day.

Recently, one of the swells of this shadow society stepped briefly into the glare of press attention.

He is Walter Jacob Pfersich Jr., who for most of his 39 years has been living in his own disordered world.

On May 18, a New York Times article mentioned Pfersich as a financial contributor to Turkey's neo-fascist Nationalist Action Party, which itself is linked to Mehmet Ali Agca, the man accused of shooting Pope John Paul II.

Pfersich, the story went on to say, had been mentioned as a leader of the American National Fascist Party in an indictment by the Turkish government of its neo-fascist group.

And so, suddenly, the name of this El Cajon man who has given $17 to the Nationalist Action Party in recent months is becoming known in the United States. The grimy, noisy courtyard of the old motor court is visited by reporters from as far away as New York. All are eager to interview "the American connection" in a possible international conspiracy to kill the pope.

What they find is a man with a mind as cluttered as the tiny apartment he has occupied since 1977.

It is true that he is the founder and leader of the National Fascist Party. He also is its only member.

His crusade is to "give fascism a good name" and to that end he has hundreds of yellow and white cards printed.

Eagerly he presses them into the visitor's hand.

"The axis of 1979," one reads, "is the axis community of nations which Italy, Spain, Turkey and Rumania are in the new nations, the new axis."

Another says: "Union of Spain and Italy into Nation as a 'duel' state with government of God."

Pfersich — he is called Jacob by his friends in the motor court — stands in the middle of his apartment and talks in an animated voice, his dark eyes darting wildly from side to side. His visitor sits in the only uncluttered spot in the room — the corner of a sagging double bed.

"I love the pope," says Jacob. "I have an autographed picture of John Paul. I sent him condolences when he was wounded. The guy they said did this wasn't a fascist. He was a Marxist."

Jacob says he is a Roman Catholic by choice, but that he quit going to church "because I didn't like the changes when they got away from the Latin."

The last time I went was Aug. 17. The priest started talking about Hitler so I walked out. I was afraid he'd say something bad about Italy and Spain."

Jacob reads and speaks Italian and Spanish.

After growing up in the United States, he lived for several years in both countries, leaving Spain in 1977 after Franco died.

He plans to return for a two-week visit Dec. 3, and from the clutter in his top dresser drawer he pulls out an airline ticket from San Diego to New York, Rome and Madrid.

Meanwhile, he subscribes to two Spanish and four Italian newspapers. He scans them for news of the MSI (Italian Fascist) and SN (Spanish Falangist) parties. Then he carefully stores them in empty beer cartons, stacked along the walls of his apartment.

Jacob is not an easy man to interview. He twists and turns. His voice rises and falls. He wanders from subject to subject starting with his childhood in the Washington, D.C. area:

"I dropped out of school when I was in the sixth grade. But I went down to the Library of Congress every morning at 9 o'clock when they unlocked the door, and I was there until they kicked me out at 10 at night. I read all day long. That's where I got my love of politics."

He has a letter that is signed by (President) Reagan. He agrees with me on a lot of things, but he can't come out and say it.

They won't take my SSI (Supplemental Security Income) away from me, will they? I need that to live on. I mean, they can't tell me not to spend my money on political activity. Brooks over there," he says, pointing to a nearby dwelling, "spends his SSI to get drunk on. I should be able to spend mine like I want to."

I didn't want to take SSI," says the unemployed man.

My father and the government made me take it. I have an emotional problem that I've had all my life. I get depressed, and then with the world I live in, it's not good for me. I need some tranquilizers, but they won't give me any. They say there's not anything wrong with my head. They've taken X-rays of my skull. But I wish I could get some tranquilizers.

I would never do any act of terrorism because I don't want to complicate the life of MSI or SN. But I've been tempted many times."

Jacob looks around the room—at the beer cartons, the bowl of cigarette butts, the unopened bars of soap and the torn map of the world tacked over his dresser.

"I have no car, no TV, nobody. The only joy I get out of life is to try and help the world."

The visitor gets up to leave and Jacob follows him outside to the gritty cement courtyard. Rock music blares out of the apartment across the way and the next-door neighbor looks up from underneath the motorcycle he is repairing.

"When," asks the founder of the National Fascist Party, "do you think my story will be printed in The New York Times?"

Probably never, he is told.

Pfersich is silent for a moment. Then, softly, he says:

"When those reporters were here before they said the FBI or police might want to talk to me. So, I called the FBI. But the man on the phone said, 'No.' He didn't want me, either."

Customers from all over, like truck driver Ed Keens of Atlanta, Ga., are attracted to the small shop.

Cleaning up after a long day.

Taking advantage of a rare quiet moment, Orv catches up on a little reading.

When Orv Buche first started cutting hair 42 years ago, there were two basic styles — sideburns on, or sideburns off.

That was in 1938, when haircuts were 50 cents and a shave only a quarter. Prices have gone up, even at Orv's Barber Shop in Ontario, but at $3 a shot it still may be one of the best deals in town.

Much of his competition comes from gleaming shops in area malls, that sport rows of chairs and prices that make Orv's fee look more like a tip. How can a one-chair barber who still speaks of haircuts and not styling salons get by?

Orv credits his steady business to reasonable prices, extra service and a barber who cares about his clients.

In addition to a haircut or shave, his customers may enjoy a shoulder rub, extra trimming of eyebrows and nosehairs, or a scalp massage.

In all those years of cutting hair, Orv has followed a philosophy that the customer is always right — regardless what the asked-for cut ends up looking like.

He calls himself a "concerned barber." Never once has a customer been turned away, and he refuses to close the shop as long as there's someone waiting for a haircut — even if it means a 12 hour day.

Orv has seen styles come and go, and lately is finding that more and more customers want short hair. He said the crew cut, and even shorter hair, is becoming more popular.

At 61, Orv figures he's still a long way from retirement. In his four decades of cutting hair, there's only been one day he was sick enough to close the shop.

As he sees it, he'll keep the striped barber pole outside the door as long as he can still wield a pair of scissors.
